

The Hidden Cost of Outdated Warehouse Solutions

No one likes to think of themselves as “outdated.” Granted, it’s a relative term. When most people hear it, they think of solutions that are a generation or two behind what they are currently using. This definition allows them to push off modernizing their own solutions, even if they, themselves, are a generation or two behind where they should be. So, before we talk about the benefits of modernization or the costs associated with procrastination, let’s see where your current warehouse solution stands by answering a few questions.

- Do you notice a significant difference between your work devices and your personal ones?
- Do your workers have to adjust to your solution vs. the other way around?
- Do your devices still have a green screen?

If you answered “yes” to any of these questions... congratulations, you have an outdated solution. Now let’s take a look at what that’s costing you to hold on to it.

MODERNIZING THE WAREHOUSE

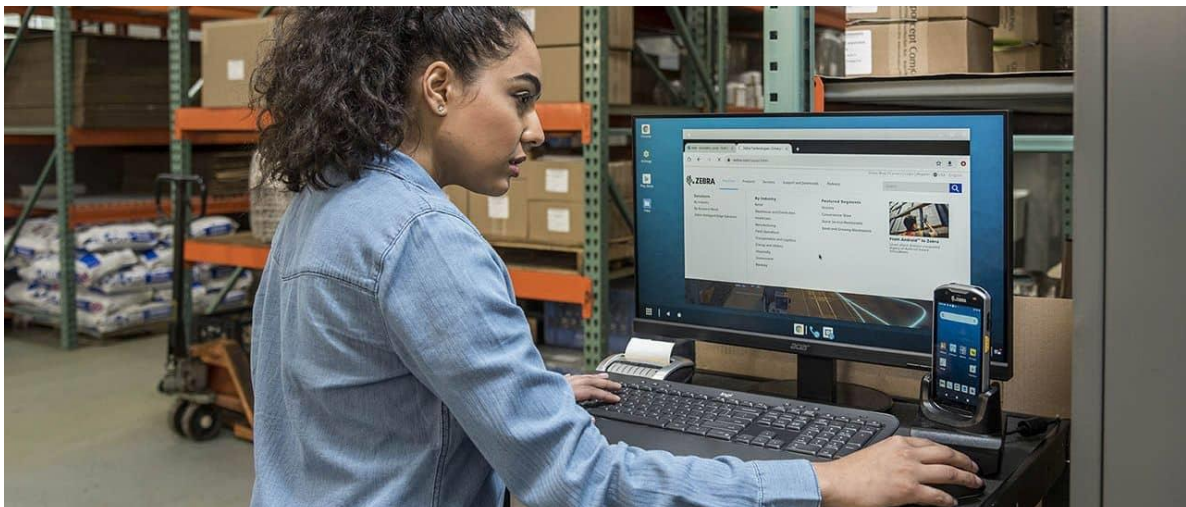

Faster delivery requirements. Global shortage of warehouse workers. Ever-increasing volumes. These are just a few of the challenges facing supply chain enterprises today. In addition to costing you money in terms of downtime, inaccuracy, and replacement costs, your outdated solutions are ineffective in helping you deal with these current and future issues. By modernizing your warehouse through digital transformation, your team's operations will become more seamless, making them quicker, more accurate, and able to handle a greater volume of work. You, in turn, will gain greater insight through multiple data collection points and become a more attractive opportunity for tech-savvy millennials who view warehousing as an "old-fashioned" low-tech business.

Listed here are the top seven labor initiatives in order from global respondents, each of which can be accomplished more quickly and efficiently through supply chain modernization.

1. Worker comfort and ergonomics
2. Optimizing the use of temporary/seasonal labor
3. Increasing training to retain labor and develop career paths
4. Training labor more quickly to reduce time and expense
5. Recruiting labor with more technical skill sets
6. Addressing labor shortages
7. Replacing an aging workforce
